

By opening herself up to new adventures, she ended up finding herself. LeAnne chose to become a fly on the wall while visiting with her daughter in Africa, humbly learning so much more about life through quiet observation. By allowing herself to be empowered to try new things, she found she could perceive concepts and ideas that were not always comfortable or easy, and in doing so attained a new kind of strength and courage--to not only discover who she was, but also who she could be.
