

I recently came across a posting on one of the most popular WW2 discussion forums. The poster asked: "Could the Philippines have been saved?" meaning right after the invasion in December 1941. My interest awakened, I started looking into the response from the other members on that site and other forums. To my surprise I found that much of the discussion pivoted around the person of General Douglas MacArthur, the officer in command of the US army forces USAFFE - in The Philippines at the time, rather than what was done, or not done, to save him and his command from its defeat. The majority put the blame for the fall of the island nation on this general. Eventually, I found that several books have been written ending with the same conclusion! This made me suspicious, I experienced much the same feeling I did when I first started my study on Operation Sea Lion, a suspicion growing stronger as I dug deeper into the story. It did not fit in with some of the parameters concerning both the general in question and the situation at the time. It was too shallow. I shall substantiate my reasoning on this as the story unfolds, the central point being that the big shots back in Washington could, or should, have acted differently. I believe The Philippines could have been saved, but not by a singular event or action, a book would have to be written to show how this could have been possible. Well, here it is.
